About IADC-TAMU

The International Association of Drilling Contractors (IADC) at Texas A&M University (TAMU) was founded in the Spring of 2017. Our mission is to catalyze engagement between TAMU students, faculty, and the drilling industry. Our purpose is to provide an opportunity to strategically engage students with the oil and gas industry and IADC, promote cross-disciplinary interaction by engaging students across a wide range of disciplines, facilitate networking between organization members, and expose students to real-world industry problems and provide technical workshops to stimulate professional development.

Our Vision

Our vision is to expand our engagement opportunities between students, faculty, & industry. Most notably, we have been fortunate enough to provide rig and facility tours, professional development workshops, and social events every year all thanks to our generous supporters.

Why Donate

With your generous donation, we will continue to grow our advocacy for the Oil and Gas industry at Texas A&M University. Our advocacy is based on our principles of leadership, integrity, and excellence towards the events we provide to our fellow students. Ultimately, it is our hope that through our events, we are able to demonstrate to all participants how much our industry cares about the communities they operate in, the importance of technical expertise, and recruitment of the upcoming workforce.

Letter from Senior Event Organizer

As the former chairman of the IADC student chapter at Texas A&M University, I am grateful for the support I have received and for the continuing support for the current leadership. As aforementioned, IADC-TAMU is known by students as the main provider for drilling rig tours, facility tours, technical drilling industry relevant workshops, icebreakers, conferences, and most notably scholarships. If you are interested in donating towards our cause, you can continue below towards the “Ways to Give” section to learn more.

Thanks & Gig ‘em,
